Cleft lip and/or palate is the most common birth defect in the United States, according to the Center for Disease Control (CDC); however, most would have you believe these conditions are of concern only in developing countries ... but nothing could be further from the truth. AmeriFace is the national nonprofit organization, based in Las Vegas, that has been formed to educate the American public about what they can do to help right here at home.

"While we have had some media exposure over the years, we need to do more to call attention to the high rate of occurrence. One in every 600 infants in the United States is born with a cleft lip and/or palate. Additionally, thousands of children, teens and adults are facially disfigured each year due to burns, trauma, and disease," explains Debbie Oliver, executive director of AmeriFace. "We need to address prevention and the many challenges facing the patients and families we represent. These contacts should include not only the patients and families, but the medical professionals who treat them, and the general public, as well."
